The car is original unrestored; 39,000 miles. Like I mentioned before, it has been in storage for 40 years. I have all the parts that have been removed i.e. grill, bumper guards, front turn signal lamps, etc. Engine runs fine and transmission. The car will need some restoration. It has new brake pads & rebuilt calipers on the front end; master cylinder needs to be replaced, clutch needs rebuilding everything else is in working order.

Classically proportioned and instantly recognisable from the moment of its introduction, the Touring-styled DB4 established a look that would survive, with only minor revisions, until 1970. Following in the classic tradition of close-coupled sports saloons, the 3.7-litre DB4 Aston Martin carries orthodox modernity to its highest pitch. A luxurious two-seat saloon which can carry four adults when necessary, it recorded almost 140mph as a two-way mean speed over the measured mile. Yet we were able to record acceleration figures from 10mph in the same gear ratio, reported The Motor magazine.

That the DB4 was able to manifest this rare combination of unrestrained high performance and civilised docility was down to its magnificent engine.
